This avant-garde series of wall-mounted lighting pieces transcends the ordinary and embraces the extraterrestrial. Inspired by the complex forms of the sunflower's inner disk flowers, each lamp is an ode to nature's intricate beauty and a testament to our biophilic design principles.

Quartz sand · binder-jet 3D printing

Even with some of the most advanced production technology, realising this piece physically has seen many challenges... Until recently, producing objects with this kind of geometry, at scale and from aggregate material, would have been near impossible. However, recent innovations have allowed these boundaries to progress and through this collection, the aim is to stretch these limits and push them to their...

Urban Stem

Sand, PLA + PVA composite

Biomimicry has been central to the research and methodology behind this collection. The initial stages of exploration were focused on finding innovative new ways of modelling organic geometry digitally and realising the designs physically. With a fascination for naturally formed organic structures, an aesthetic identity of similar character and taste is clearly visible. The aim has been to create structures that look as...

Orbital

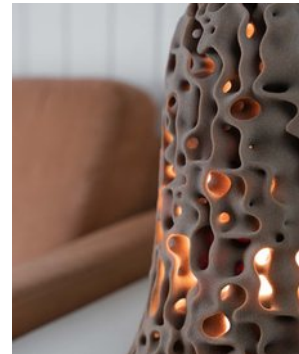

Sand composites

The Orbital Collection takes its form language from erosion: particle collision, tides and weathering on earth, and the less predictable cosmic forces that sculpt matter in orbit. Each piece is printed with an intricate, porous structure, so the light finds its way out through hidden openings and diffuses softly into the room.
